Published in its original Urdu.The Green Party, the country's fourth-largest party with 13 MPs, is calling on the Conservatives to put an end to the practice of voting for the second-place party, so that voters can have a more direct choice. Speaking to HuffPost Canada, party leader Elizabeth May said voting for the third- or fourth-place party in ridings where a party has more than three MPs can be an "informal way of rewarding the losers." "If we are going to have proportional representation, there has to be an alternative to the duopoly of Conservatives and Liberals," said May. "There has to be a credible alternative. If there is only one party of any significance, then people will just vote for that party, which is what we have right now." "If there is only one party of any significance, then people will just vote for that party, which is what we have right now." Green Party leader Elizabeth May Under proportional representation, voters can vote for more than one party. In Canada, a single transferable vote is used, where voters rank candidates from first to second preference. In the 2015 election, for instance, the Green Party received 18.67 per cent of the vote, giving it 12 MPs, while the Liberals earned 33.84 per cent and had 143 MPs. The NDP received 19.73 per cent of the vote but only eight MPs, while the Conservatives collected just 21.74 per cent but had 166 MPs. 82157476af
